Preparing for the next 25 years of Quality Management Standards

First published in 1987, ISO 9000 has consistently been ISO's most popular series of standards. Now, building on 25 years of success, subcommittee SC 2, Quality systems, is busy laying the groundwork for the next generation of quality management standards.

The standard includes following specifications:

- Provide a stable core set of requirements for the next 10 years or more
- Remain generic, and relevant to all sizes and types of organization operating in any sector
- Maintain the current focus on effective process management to produce desired outcomes
- Take account of changes in quality management systems practices and technology since the last major revision in 2000
- Reflect changes in the increasingly complex, demanding and dynamic environments in which organizations operate

Green Building LEED - GCAS new product profile

Why Green Products?

Manufacturers are increasingly asked by customers to supply “green” products for use in “green” or “sustainable” building. This trend is driven by many issues we see or hear about in the media daily – for example, concerns over resource depletion, greenhouse gas emissions and global warming, waste generation and occupant health.

Marketing Your Green Products

Manufacturers that serve commercial, institutional and other non-residential clients are increasingly being asked to supply products for green building
